THE WEEKLY CLARION. Vol. XLI .-- No 26.

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1878.

EXTRACTS FROM

The counties of Wilkinson, Adams, Jefferson, Claiborne, and Warren are the the river counties carved from the territory first settled in the State of Misdissippi. The settlements along the Mississippi came up from New Orleans and went gradually up the stream. The English or American immigration to that river antedated but a very short time the war of the Revolution. The commencement of the war accelerated the settlement, many seeking an asylum from the horrors of war within the peaceful borders of this new and far away land. The five counties above named constituted the county of Bourbon when the jurisdiction of the United States was extended to the territory. Very soon after it was divided into three counties-Wilkinson, Adams, and Jefferson; and subsequently, as the population increased, Claiborne and Warren were organized and established. These counties were named after John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, General Wilkinson, General Warren, who fell at Bunker's Hill, and General Ferdinand Claiborne, a distinguished citizen of the Territory. As a Territory Mississippi extended to and omprised all the territory east to the Alabama River or to the Georgia line. In fact, there was no distinct eastern boundary until the admission of the State into the Union.

The leading men of the communities first formed in the counties on the Mis stssippi were men of intelligence and substance. The very first were those who, to avoid the consequences of the war of the Revolution, had sought security here. Some, who conscientiously The State of Maryland has, scrupled as to their duty in that conflict --unwitting to violate an allegiance which they felt they owed to the British crown, and equally unwilling to take and over the garden grounds around and dresses saves often one half the cost, and he victoral notes from the States | part against their kindred and neighbors- had left their homes and come here.
